Going to for plans and will for spontaneous decisions helping game
Work in groups of three or four. Choose one thing that you would probably need help with such as something from the list at the bottom of the page below. Secretly write one thing that will need doing to complete that thing, e.g. for "Have a picnic" *you could write "*Check the weather forecast". Tell your partners which thing you are planning (i.e. the part that is written below, not the part you have written). They should make offers to help you until someone offers to do the thing that you have written down. Score one point for any helpful ideas (and thank them for their help) and 10 points for offering to do the thing that you have written. If you think what they offer to do is not helpful, tell them so politely and give them no points for that offer.

If there are only two people in your group, play the same game but without scoring points – just continue offering help and reacting to the help until the help which was written down is offered.

Useful language for reacting to offers of help
"Really? (You're too kind/ Thanks). That'll be a great help" (and give your partner 1 point)
"That was just what I was thinking of. Thanks a lot." (and give your partner 10 points)
"Hmm, I'm not sure we need that. Thanks anyway" (and give your partner no points)
